

Short Biography

Temitope Adebayo is enrolled for a PhD in Epidemiology at the University of Basel in the chronic disease unit of the Swiss TPH. She has a MSc Public Health degree with specialization in environmental epidemiology and biostatistics from the University of Pretoria, South Africa (SA) of which she graduated in the top 5% of her class. She has worked on spatial-temporal dynamic of malaria in SA in collaboration with the French National Institute of Health and Medical Research (INSERM) and Aix-Marseille University. Her current research interest is understanding the combined health effects of multiple air pollutants on cardio-respiratory disease in Cape-Town.