

Dominique Barjolle Musard

Dominique Barjolle is senior researcher at Université de Lausanne. She is agronomist and economist, and has strong interest in agriculture and food, within the concept of food system. Food system is formed by ecological and social factors, complex, heterogeneous in time and space with non-linear mutual influences. Production, distribution and consumption from farm to fork are the productive units of the food system, which are influenced by the market, politics, society and the environment, at different spatial scales.