

Saskia De Gani

Head Center for Health Literacy,
Careum

Saskia De Gani is a public health expert specialized in health literacy and its importance within complex health systems. She leads the Center for Health Literacy of the Careum Foundation and the research focus on health literacy at the Careum School of Health. Her work explores health literacy as a dynamic concept, linking individual competencies with organizational and system-level responsibilities. She focuses on translating research into practice and policy with the aim of strengthening health literacy within diverse fields and settings including healthcare, public health, digital and complex information ecosystems, and education. Saskia De Gani is engaged in national and international networks and initiatives, including endeavors for the systematic improvement of quality health information.